OYAN Scholarship Report by Gregory Lum, Jesuit High School Library

It was a whirlwind of activities at the ALA in DC in June. In chronological order, here are my top ten highlights:

2) Attending the opening of the Exhibits on Friday evening.

3) Listening to several authors read their works from fiction to poetry at the Many Voices, One Nation on Friday evening. This event highlighted ALA President Camila Ailire’s Family Literacy Focus, an initiative to encourage families in ethnically diverse communities to read and learn together. At the reception, I was able to personally visit with a few of the authors including Marina Budhos and R. Dwayne Betts.

4) Serving as chair of YALSA’s 2011 Quick Picks for Reluctant Young Adult Readers committee. After many emails and blogs, it was nice to put faces to names at our first meeting. We spent ten hours discussing the nominated titles on Saturday and Sunday. Here is a link to the current nominations: http://www.ala.org/ala/mgrps/divs/yalsa/booklistsawards/quickpicks/quickpick.cfm If you would like to make a field nomination, complete this online form: http://yalsa.ala.org/forms/quickpick.php

5) Attending the Random House gala at the Newseum on Saturday. PBS and Random House gave a sneak peek of the upcoming Dr. Seuss animated television series. Comedian Martin Short is the voice of Dr. Seuss.

6) Attending the Newbery/Caldecott banquet on Sunday evening. I sat with a contingent of Oregon librarians from Bend, Portland, Tigard, and Lebanon. Jerry Pinkney gave a very heartwarming acceptance speech for his book, The Lion and the Mouse. Rebecca Stead, Newbery medal recipient, spoke graciously about her work and receiving the medal. Many standing ovations were given throughout the evening.

7) Attending the Farrar Strauss / First Second / Roaring Brook Press breakfast at the National Press Club on Monday morning. The view was very impressive!

8) Running through the exhibits one last time on Monday to get free books and posters.

9) Attending the Printz Awards ceremony on Monday. I listened to Libba Bray’s hilarious speech as well as the four honor recipients.

10) Avoiding the humidity by taking the Thomson Gale busses and DC taxis! Yikes, the east coast is HOT!

Thank you to OYAN for this scholarship to pay for the ALA annual registration. I encourage other OYAN members to attend national conferences.
Teens Make Their Own Ugly Dolls by Aimee Meuchel, Tualatin Public Library

Aimee has offered the Ugly Dolls class not once, not twice, but THREE times in one calendar year!

Why? This class seems to have struck a nerve with the teens of Tualatin. LeBrie Rich, a Portland area Felt artist, has been teaching different craft classes for Tualatin Library for over a year now. Last year she came up with the idea of teaching teens how to make their own softies. I changed the name to Make Your Own Ugly Doll and we have hit a gold mine! She first taught the class over spring break in March and had 17 teens in attendance. I had an additional 12 who wanted to get in so I decided to start off our summer reading program with this class again. Again the class size was limited to 15 and we had 32 sign-up! We allowed 18 in that time since some were returnees finishing their dolls from the first class. LeBrie has agreed to teach the class again in October for the teens who haven’t been able to get in. I’m not even advertising the class. I’m calling the teens who have been waiting to get in and inviting them first!

The class is 3 ½ hours with a break for snacks and drinks. It begins with teens drawing their Ugly Dolls. They then create large sized graph paper and scale their creation up for the pattern. They add a seam allowance, cut the pattern and then pin it to the fabric. They cut the fabric, hand sew the dolls, stuff, and decorate. It is an amazingly fun and educational class that keeps the teens coming through the door! I hope all of you consider offering a class like this in the near future for your community of teens!

Dear Aimee,
Aimee knows stuff. You should listen to her.

Dear PPNE,
I don’t know what’s wrong. I told everyone that they should send their questions to the Ask Aimee column, but clearly no one has listened to me. How shall I punish them?

Getting Graphic by Ruth Allen, Multnomah County Library

Previously published on Multnomah County Library’s Embarrassment of Riches blog at http://blogs.multcolib.org/readers/

I must confess that I loathe manga. I think the characters’ huge eyes are disturbing, and I find most of the plots mystifying at best and insipid at worst. Even though I’ve had a number of people explain the appeal, I still don’t find them appealing. I’m sure the problem is with me since millions of other people seem to enjoy manga. I do, however, occasionally enjoy a good graphic novel and I’ve read three this past week that hit the spot.

I was recently in Amsterdam, and when I got back, I read A Family Secret, a graphic novel that is set in that city during World War II. The story is about two girls - one Dutch and the other a Jewish German who left Germany with her family to escape the Nazis. The Dutch family members represent a variety of Dutch people’s positions during the war: one brother joins the Resistance; another joins the army and fights in Russia with the Germans; the father is a policeman who finds no other choice than to keep doing his job even when the Nazis require him to do things his family would rather he didn’t; and the girl and mother are sickened by what’s happening in their city. The story was compelling and the twist at the end was satisfying. I’m looking forward to reading the companion book, The Search.

Oregon is the home of the most recent women’s Olympic gold medalist in fencing (2008), and so I decided to read a bit more about the sport when I saw Foiled by Jane Yolen on the shelf. Alieria is a loner at school who is awesome at fencing. She basically goes from high school to fencing lessons to home, and then does it all over the next day. She doesn't need anyone, and the other students certainly don't seem to need her. But then the new school year starts and a gorgeous new boy ends up being her lab partner. What to do? Her fencing instructor has always said she needs to protect her heart, but that's now proving to be difficult. I thought this was going to be a straightforward romance, but it turned out to be something a little different.

Another sort of different story is Prime Baby by Gene Luen Yang. Many of us who have siblings have wondered at one time or another if our brothers and sisters might have come from outer space. When Thaddeus’s young sister begins making noises, all of which come out in prime numbers (eg. “ga ga ga” and “ga ga ga ga ga”), he thinks his sister might be an alien. Everybody thinks he's crazy, but then something happens that surprises everyone BUT Thaddeus. I liked the sassy, snarky kid - he's got brains, imagination and, in the end, heart.
know that they’re involving themselves in a battle that will decide the fate of humanity. What connection does a symbol from their youth have to the fate of the world? This series should appeal to even non-manga fans through its mature artwork and engaging mystery. Kenji & co. aren’t superheroes, per se, though they will be forced to save the world. Recommend this series to older teens!

Jimmy Corrigan: The Smartest Kid on Earth by Chris Ware

Jimmy isn’t a superhero…but he often daydreams that he is. Saddled with a boring office job, non-existent family relations, and no hope for a love life, Jimmy spends much of his days in a fantasy world where he dons a costume that mysteriously resembles that of Superman and becomes “the smartest kid on Earth!” As the story progresses, we learn that a history of familial abandonment throughout the Corrigan family tree is once again threatening to consume the current generation.

20th Century Boys by Naoki Urasawa

I absolutely had to include a manga on this little list, and there was never any question which one would make it here! Although it has been available in Japan for nearly a decade, 20th Century Boys finally began making its way to the United States last year, and Western Otaku breathed a sigh of relief! When Kenji and his friends begin an investigation into the bizarre suicide of their childhood friend Donkey, they don’t know that they’re involving themselves in a battle that will decide the fate of humanity. What connection does a symbol from their youth have to the fate of the world? This series should appeal to even non-manga fans through its mature artwork and engaging mystery. Kenji & co. aren’t superheroes, per se, though they will be forced to save the world. Recommend this series to older teens!

Superheroes for People Who Don’t Like Superheroes: A Brief List! by Ian Duncanson

Perhaps the best policy is to avoid movies based on Alan Moore books in general. Let’s hope Scott Pilgrim vs. the World, due to be released August 13, won’t disappoint fans of Bryan O’Malley’s graphic novel series!

In Dark Knight, Batman is just as mentally anguished with his role of vigilante as the burdened superheroes of Alan Moore’s Watchmen comic series. Gotham is rotting and crime-ridden, not the sanitized comic book metropolis that is lucky to only suffer from the occasional super villain problem. Look no further than this for the basis of Heath Ledger’s portrayal of the Joker in the last Batman film.

The League of Extraordinary Gentlemen by Alan Moore

I neglected to include Watchmen on this short list because the movie was too hyped and recent, but here’s a less famous, still awesome graphic novel by Moore that was also made into a disappointing movie. If you’ve ever wanted to see classic characters from famous Victorian novels team up to save a steampunk version of England, this is the superhero comic for you! Think of League as the most over-the-top “superhero” graphic novel in Moore’s canon. It’s non-traditional, but nowhere near as serious or brooding as V for Vendetta or Watchmen. I would stick with older teens when recommending this one! Steer clear of the movie at all costs.
